THE GRAND ARMY BANQUET

The reception and banquet of the Grand Army of the Republic in Faneuil Hall Boston, on Wednesday evening was attended by a large number of the delegates and many distinguished citizens who were present as guests. The Hall was profusely decorated the names of Washington and Grant being displayed prominently on the gallery fronts, with the names of the 13 original States over their respective sections and numerous patriotic mottoes on the walls. The galleries were filled with ladies and on the floor the banquet table was laid with three hundred and sixty five plates. Gilmore's band furnished the music. The telegraph gives the following account of the festivities:

Chaplain Alonzo H. Quint offered prayer—Generals Burnside and Hooker were greeted with vociferous applause as they each entered the hall after the company left. General Win. Coggswell presided over the exercises that followed the repast. He welcomed the guests of the evening to Massachusetts and Faneuil Hall in a graceful speech exhorting them to renew'd energy in the charitable work of the order and reminding them of the patriotic associations of the place of meetings.

He closed by introducing General Logan, the Commander in Chief who returned thanks
on behalf of his command for the kindly reception after enlogizing Massachusetts as the leading State in the Revolution and as among the most energetic in the late war he reiterated the leading points of his address to the order in business session laying particular stress upon its charitable features.

Capt W W Blackburn was introduced as toast master and announced "Our Country" which the band responded to with "America."

not only for his successes, but for his misfortunes in which he and many present had participated. But he said no section of the Grand Army was recognized in the fellowship of the order as all were banded for the welfare of the whole.

Gen. Charles Devens Jr., spoke for 'Our Volunteers.' He said it was difficult to realize that ten years had passed since the drum of secession was sounded and took occasion to contrast the bearing of the people of America with that of the people of France now under similar circumstances. The nation that depended upon the people instead of regular armies to defend her in her hour of trial, was safe, while the best of armies unsupported by sentiment and the strength of its subjects, was not to be relied upon.

Peace and prosperity, he said, had drawn a veil over this awful scene of five to ten years ago in the minds of non participants, but those scenes would never be effaced from the memories of those who fought. No wreaths on traitors graves would soldiers lay, they would not

The Navy having no representation was responded for by the band, and the festivities were concluded at 11 o'clock by the comrades joining hands and singing "Auld Lang Syne."

AT SEA IN AN OPEN BOAT
The statements of Captain Griffin of the Schooner Lillias, recently published by us, are corroborated by Mr J B Caldwell master of the British brig Elizabeth Ann, whose captain's report, some time since, was published in our columns.

At 8 o'clock the same evening the two mates consequently left in the schooner Lillias' boat, fitting her out with sail, compass, chart and provisions sufficient to carry them to Elbow Cay, 76 miles distant. Before they were outside of Sagua the boat abandoned a sea which washed out her prow.
